

Postmodernism will say something like....

You can believe what you want to believe and that is right for you. I can believe something different and therefore its right for me. They can contradict each other but neither one of us is wrong.

Or

Even though what you believe it true because I believe something different what you believe won't affect me.

Answer: You may not believe you have cancer but if a doctor examines you and tells you that you have cancer your belief is not going to change the fact that you have cancer nor is that belief going to change your death. The same could be said for the Bible. It is a result of God examining our souls and giving a diagnosis. Our belief does not change the diagnosis. We can either take the treatment and have life or ignore the advice of wise council which will lead to death.