

Dear Santa,

The last letter I wrote you was 9 years ago, when I asked for a lego system box (which btw, I never received). Ever since then I stopped sending you letters and notes because it was the third time in turn when you dissapointed me. And from that moment on, I decided that it's time to handle by myself things that I wanted.

And so I did for a lot of time & most of my wishes became reality. However, this year I failed with everything: buying new books, moving, studying abroad, new tattoo, new job, a british short hair tomcat, my work practitioner license as a psychologist, a new pc, a visit to Amsterdam, etc.

And since it looks like badluck is haunting me, I decided to do the same thing I did 9 years ago. Write you. 9 years ago the fact that you, a little fatty white-bearded & sweet children loving guy, disappointed me, helped me understand that actually I should never wait for others to solve my problems.

But it seems like this year I forgot how this is done, and I need one more time the favor you made me back then. Dissapoint me please, so I can remind myself how is it that people gain self-confidence when others let them down or pass away. So I can remember all the good things I have done for myself. So I can remember that usually being on your own is a blessing and not the end of the world. So I can remember everything I did this year: all the women I slepted with, all the drugs that I took, the whiskey bootles, the small orgies & vacancies, the street fights & travelling, the great books I read and the cool sadomaso-nymphomaniac sentimental sagittarius moldavian brunette that I met one month and a half ago (who ressembles with me so much that we both freak out)

Dear Santa, I'm waiting for you to do the easiest thing in the world. Nothing.

Claudiu
